5 There are three critical function units in an intelligent network: call-handling functions (for example, call handling, the basic functions of telecommunication networks); service execution functions (for example, switching, resource control); and service management functions SMF (including development, offering, administering IN services).

dependability and recovery capability after a connection outage; employment of the existing physical connections of the external device to the IN; parallel payload channels dare not be influenced.
The service logic must thereby satisfy the following conditions: no manual interventions needed at the device for administration and operation; security assured, for instance by unambiguously assigned identities, whereby the existing numberings should be employable for the addressing; and suitable for a multitude of device types and interfaces.--
